H) Claim or Claims

What I claim as my invention is: a small palm-sized box-shaped battery operated electronic signaling device, of which the non electrical box-shaped part is made of plastic and has the words, 'Cheque please,' cut through one of the plastic surfaces and of which the electrical parts, consisting of a battery and wires entirely enclosed within the small palm-sized box, a switch and three resistive elements, two light-emitting diodes (LEDs) and an incandescent bulb, which light up as electrical current from the battery passes through them, and of which the two LEDs are partially enclosed within and partially mounted on the surface of the small palm-sized box and of which the incandescent bulb is mounted entirely within the box, the field of activity of this signaling device consisting of visually and soundlessly summoning a wait or service person in a restaurant, café or other public place by lighting up in two different ways, that is, lighting up either the red LED or lighting up both the green LED and the white incandescent bulb at the same time, in order to visually capture their attention thus signaling to service persons that their presence is wanted and/or that a check for goods and/or services provided by the establishment is wanted by the individual(s) in possession of the device.
